

BRANCHING OUT

WELCOME TO OUR SECOND EDITION!

I had very little to do yesterday. I started walking around the front foyer and checked out our graduation composites. When the school opened fifteen years ago, we decided to avoid the dreaded “double cohort”. For those of you too young to remember, the double cohort was the educational version of the Y2K scare that came at the turn of the millennium. Now that I think of it, those two young for the “double cohort” were even younger in 1999.

Anyway, we decided not to take grade twelves in our first year, and not graduate two grades in one year. So our first graduate composite is dated 2003, and has about fifteen young faces on it. I can’t tell you the memories that spring to mind just looking at kids when they were at school and were about seventeen years old. They are about thirty now, and most of them don’t come around much – not because they had bad experiences here, but because time has a way of adding responsibilities to our lives as we get older, and visiting our old high school just doesn’t measure up when the time chips are down. I believe this was a mistake in my life from the beginning.

In June of 2016, we will be celebrating our fourteenth graduation. By the end of that ceremony, we will have graduated almost 900 students, all of whom, I’m sure, are doing their best to do their best. Nothing else is asked of them.

High school is something that happens in our lives when we are most impressionable. I got too busy to really enjoy it, and now, every once in a while, I google some high school classmates to see what happened to them- too little, too late. Ms. Newton has been spearheading an Alumni program for a few years now. Since the great majority of you left us with fond memories, it would be a good idea if you reconnected with the school and some old friends. We will not be twisting arms for money, I promise. All we are doing is providing opportunities to touch base with some of the most important people in your lives, have some fun, tell some old Pagano war stories, and embrace a part of your life that was instrumental in making you who you are.

Enjoy the read, and take advantage of the opportunities to re-connect.

Best always:

Vince Pagano

LIFE OF A FIRST YEAR UNIVERSITY STUDENT

JASMIN KATZ '15

It's hard to believe that it has been just over eight months since I walked across the stage to receive my diploma, and graduate from Crestwood Preparatory College. During my years at CPC I had the privilege and honour of developing relationships with some of the greatest educators and mentors out there, with whom I still keep in touch. I met people who I now consider to be my best friends, and I received an outstanding education. I was involved in the female peer mentor program, the volleyball team, and I was a peer tutor. Deciding between Science, Art, Business, and English courses in Grade 11 was not a tough decision for me. Early on in my studies, I developed a strong interest in Biology, Psychology and Cognitive Science, and I knew I wanted to pursue this passion. In addition to my science and math courses I had the opportunity of taking other courses, including World Religions, English, S.A.P., French, and others, which molded me into the well-rounded student that I am.

Today, I am an undergraduate student at Queen's University in the Science program, with the intention of making my science-psychology aspiration of mine a reality. Crestwood sparked a love for learning in me that has motivated me to continue my education and work towards my long-term goals. I plan on majoring in psychology, followed by a further specialization in the neuro-psychology field – but who knows where I'll end up... I could always return to Crestwood as part of the faculty! I have a strong desire to succeed; through hard work, and implementing the skills that Crestwood has taught me, I know that success is attainable. Apart from my academics, at Queen's I am now a member of a community outreach committee, whereby volunteers pair up with individuals of all ages living with developmental disabilities through one-on-one interaction. I don't know where I would be today, without Crestwood.

Hopefully, I will find my place here at Queen's, and it will become my community and more than just a school, as Crestwood was for me.

Since graduating Crestwood in 2014, I have tried to do as much as I can with my own music outside of class. In July of 2014, I released my first self-produced album, Stranger on the Subway, and in April of 2015, I released my second album, Teletransporter, both on Bandcamp.com. I'm now in the process of creating a third album, (planned to be released in the summer of 2016). I'm also starting to perform live in small concerts and coffeehouses as practice for a possible show in June of 2016. This June concert will serve as promotion for my upcoming album. All updates for my music are posted on my Facebook page.

Academically, I'm currently in my second year at the University of Toronto studying Commerce at the Rotman School of Management with a Specialist in Management – Marketing. I'm a part of Tales of Harmonia, a student-run choir based out of the Multi-Faith Centre at U of T, where I sing and serve on the executive board. As of January 2016, a colleague and I have created the University of Toronto Media and Entertainment Business Association, (or UTMEB), a brand new club that hopes to run conferences and networking workshops for students interested in a career in the entertainment industry.

I graduated from Crestwood in 2011, and recently graduated from Wilfrid Laurier University with my Bachelor of Arts Psychology Degree. So much changed after I left Crestwood. In 2012 I was named the Canadian Delegate for the Girls 20 Summit in Mexico City. I was able to bring the concerns of Canadian women to the summit, which focused on global economic and social empowerment. This culminated in our communiqué, which was directly presented to the G20.

Since that time, I continue to help guide young change makers through the summit application process, as I find it helps them expand their thinking about global issues. As a former delegate, I continue to act as an ambassador for the organization. In 2015 I was a keynote speaker for the 4th Canadian Division of the Armed Forces' International Women's Day, and an International Women's Day guest on Canada AM. I am excited to celebrate International Women's Day at the event again this year. This experience has really made me think about the path I want to take in my career, but I'm excited for whatever the next chapter holds.

It's hard to believe that it's been over a year since I graduated from Crestwood, and that I'm already finishing my first semester of my second year. It seems like just yesterday I was researching different programs and touring university campuses. However with the help of both teachers and Crestwood alumni, I was able to find the right school and the right program for this next chapter of my life.

After graduating from Crestwood in 2014, I started at McMaster University in Hamilton, Ontario. The decision to go to McMaster was not an easy one, but when it came time to make my final decision, I realized that McMaster encompassed everything that I was looking for in a post-secondary education. It was far enough from home that I could live on campus, it offered the program and courses I was looking for, and it had the school spirit and extra-curricular activities that I enjoy. Today, a year and a half later, I have been accepted into my program of communication studies and multimedia, and I can confidently say that my expectations have been met!

I'll admit, the first semester of first year was not easy. Not because of the academics or the living away from home, but rather because of the social scene. There was only one other Crestwood graduate coming to Mac from my year, which meant that I would be starting the school year (almost) on my own. Hence why I decided to apply for a random roommate. This was without a doubt one of the best decisions I have ever made. My roommate and I hit it off right away and quickly became great friends! Throughout the course of the semester, I met more people through my residence, my classes, and extra-curricular activities, many of which I am still very good friends with today.

At Crestwood, I loved getting involved with extra curricular activities and sports teams as a way of taking a break from classes and having fun with friends. I decided that university should not be any different. Since starting at Mac last September, I have joined many school clubs, including the Communications and Multimedia student society, Humanities Welcome Week Reps (Frosh week leaders) and joined a campaign team for one of the candidates running for student body president. These opportunities have helped me break out of my shell, as well as get involved with the student life on campus which I have come to love so much!

Although university is a very different experience from high school, I can confidently say that my experiences at Crestwood prepared me well for this next chapter of my life. I am so thankful for the support Crestwood gave me in deciding which university would be right for me, and I am so happy that I have found a second home at McMaster.

After four amazing years at Crestwood Preparatory College, I graduated in Spring 2014. Due to Crestwood's assistance and encouragement I was accepted to the Undergraduate School of Business at the University of Miami.

Since then, I have applied the knowledge, direction, and confidence I developed at Crestwood to everything I do, academically and personally. During my first year at UM, I was initiated to Delta Sigma Pi, the prominent professional business fraternity on campus; I was hired to tutor NCAA student athletes; and, I achieved a 3.74 GPA, earning myself a spot on the Dean's List. While I was keeping up with my classes, job, and extracurriculars, I was researching and applying to internships for the summer after my freshman year. I eventually gained an acceptance from The Fund for American Studies, a program in Washington, D.C., which allows students to intern in the field of business and government relations, while attending an upper-level economics course at George Mason University. The internship I did over the summer was in Government Affairs at the head office of Siemens USA, observing how a corporate government affairs office operates and seeks to influence the US Congress. I attended hearings on Capitol Hill, meetings with lobbyists & congressional staff and coalition meetings, then reported back to directors and the CEO about how Congressional decisions can and will impact business at Siemens. Additionally, I performed research and writing projects that helped the company's grass-roots outreach efforts and PAC. On my "free-time" in Washington, I went to briefings at the State Department regarding terrorism, heard Congressional staff describe what it is like to be "lobbied", and visited every major museum in D.C.

I am now in my sophomore year at the University of Miami and have become a teaching assistant for a course on cultural competency, continue tutoring NCAA athletes, actively contribute to my business fraternity, and have maintained and improved my grades. While I attribute a lot of my success to the University of Miami for giving me the resources and inspiration to become the person I am today, I have more to thank Crestwood for, in particular its diligent and conscientious teachers and administrators. Crestwood exposed me to multiple business experiences that sparked my initial interest in making business my major in university, it encouraged me to shoot for the stars, and, most of all, Crestwood taught me the study skills required to maintain the hectic schedule I have today.

I graduated from Crestwood in 2013. I feel so fortunate to have attended this high school. As an international student, I used to be shy and unexpressive; however, the teachers really helped me in more ways than to simply enrich my basic knowledge. They have also helped shape me into the confident person that I am today, and for that I am, and will always, be thankful.

After graduating from Crestwood, I went on to enroll in a Bachelor of Science Honours degree from Queen's University. Currently, I am in my third year of Biochemistry. I am studying the molecular mechanisms by which genetic information encoded in DNA and how the biological molecules give rise to the processes that occur within living cells. I have developed an interest in the applied biochemistry of drug development, and subsequently, I became a research assistant in my professor's research group last summer. In October, I had the opportunity to present my research project at 28th MOOT NMR Conference at McMaster University. Currently, I am conducting research on using Oxygen-17 to label glucose and amino acids, which can then be further used to diagnose diabetes.

During my spare time, I am also volunteering at Hotel Dieu Hospital as an urgent care assistant. There, I get a chance to interact with the doctors and nurses, and assist in the care and treatment of emergency patients.

After graduation, I wish to continue my research here at Queen's University with the hopes of obtaining a Master of Science degree in Pharmacology.

Once again, I would like to thank the staff of Crestwood Preparatory College for providing me the wonderful facilities, an interesting extracurricular program and wonderful course selection. More importantly, thank you for giving young adults like myself the confidence and courage to follow our dreams.

OLIVER CASEY '11

Oliver Casey here, Class of 2011, and yup, that's me in the Crestwood mascot suit. I'm flattered to share my story since graduating, but first, I have to say that there is smile on my face when I think back to my days at C'Wood. Crestwood's students, faculty, and facility managers further developed my positive attitude, confidence, and love of a good challenge.

I began my post-secondary adventure with a year in Lakehead University's Outdoor Recreation and Education program. Thunder Bay is a brilliant town with great people where everyone shares their love of the Canadian outdoors. We climbed Mt. McKay (in February!), waded through the mouth of Lake Superior (in November) and my team won first prize in a sled-building competition. I always had an infatuation with learning. Not once did I skip a class at Crestwood, but I have to say, my homework record wasn't ideal. I found university was more of the same. I began to look for a different learning opportunity; more doing, less sitting.

Having spent three summer terms working with Cole Contracting rebuilding homes in east Toronto, the call of working with my hands and learning a trade was too strong, so I enrolled in Georgian College in Barrie to study Carpentry Techniques. I proudly graduated in 2013 (with my toolbelt on) and started work for Western Mechanical. Now this is an interesting story. While enjoying my training at Georgian, I applied for a construction and trades bursary from the Kempenfelt Rotary Club, and won! Upon acceptance I was honoured to be asked to express my gratitude at the next Rotary Club meeting. As a result of my presentation, a gentleman offered me his card and stated "come find me when you're done school, I'll give you a job." He is one of the principals of Western Mechanical, a significant millwrighting, mechanical contracting, electrical contracting, civil works, heavy lifting and heavy transportation business in Barrie. I phoned him on a Wednesday, and on the Friday I was in training for my first job. In no time I was signed up with the local 2309 Millwrights. I am now a 3rd year Millwright Apprentice working towards my Construction Millwright 'ticket'. I have helped install robotic cells for OEMs and Tier 1 auto manufacturers, a new tissue paper machine for a leading Canadian household paper manufacturer, a transformer in one of Ontario's private nuclear plants, and multiple railway and road bridges. My jobs to date have taken me all over Ontario, and even to Qu eretaro, Mexico.

OLIVER CASEY CON'T

If you've read this far, it's okay to ask: "so what the heck is a millwright?" A millwright repairs, rebuilds, installs, deconstructs, and maintains all the heavy machinery that makes the world turn. We do heavy lifting and rigging, using hydraulic jacks, cranes, forklifts and self-propelled trailers. My program requires 8,000 hours of supervised experience, and three terms of training at George Brown College. This amounts approximately to four years, sort of like an undergrad, but it's all paid hours. So when you next buy a Honda CRV, Chevy Colorado, Royale Tissue, or take the Old Weston Road bridge, think of us millwrights.

This Fall, I purchased my first home, a 66-acre farm in Coldwater, Ontario, which is yearning for a handyman. I plan to farm it as a hobby farm while I renovate the 115 year old farmhouse. Come visit anytime, but bring your coveralls.

I am grateful, truly, for my time at Crestwood. I was given great support, leadership opportunities and the "anticipation of success" that Mr. Pagano promised.

Laugh lots, Build bridges, and Don't be bitter!

I graduated from Crestwood in 2013 and I don't think many would have guessed what I ended up doing.

Physics classes with Mr. Sunderland helped spark my interest in Science so I decided to follow this interest into an engineering program at university. I ended up in the lesser known engineering stream of mining engineering, at Queen's University in the Robert M. Buchanan School of mining, and have never looked back.

Mining has given me so many opportunities right from the start. We travelled several kilometers underground in our first week of class at a mine located in Timmins and most recently completed a drilling and blasting course, which involved preparing and testing explosive.

I was involved with several extracurricular activities at Crestwood such as competing in Ivey case competitions, DECA, and Model UN at U of T. Since some of these were my best learning experiences I have continued to spend time out of the classroom in a constructive way. Beyond the classroom I have been able to get involved in several departmental competitions taking place all over the world. Most recently I travelled to Saskatoon, Saskatchewan to compete in the World Mining Competition where we placed third in the world, the first time Queen's has placed, and most recently I was part of a team that just finished designing a mine for the Society of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers design competition, taking place in Phoenix Arizona.

I am in second year Theatre Studies with AMPD (Arts, Media, Performance, and Design) Program at York University. Since I left Crestwood, I started the Psychology Program at York University and ending up disliking it. Since joining the AMPD program at York University in 2014, my grades have excelled. I do not regret leaving the Psychology program and pursuing my theatrical dreams.

I have made lots of new great friends at York University this year and I am having so much fun. I love to spend my spare time at my home gym training for 5k runs. I ran two 5k's this year (July and October) and I am planning on running one in Disney World. I also have a theatre performance project coming up. .

SARAH LEVIN '08

After graduating from Crestwood in 2008, I attended Western University, where I received an HBA (Honours Business Administration) from Ivey Business School. I had always loved getting involved in “after-school” events at Crestwood and the endless extra-curricular opportunities that university life offered only strengthened this passion of mine even more. At Western, I participated in athletic intramurals and was also involved in various committees, including the Marketing Association & Hope For Relief – a program that allowed me to tutor elementary school students. Being a part of these clubs allowed me to meet lifelong friends and learn important life lessons.

I was fortunate enough to begin my career right after university, taking a job opportunity at Bell Canada. I started in a 'new graduate rotational program,' where I was able to experience several different job rotations in the span of two years. This opportunity allowed me to learn various areas of the business and helped me better understand what aspects of marketing I enjoy most. This program led me to my current role as a Mobility Product Manager. With the telecommunications industry trending in the media, being at the forefront of many government concerns as well playing a huge part in our personal lives (who isn't obsessed with their cell phone?!), it is both challenging and rewarding.

Since graduating, I've done lots of traveling through South East Asia & Europe, and plan to do lots more this summer. I am also an avid runner, am involved in mentorship programs for new graduates and love exploring new restaurants, shops & areas of the city.

The skills that I learned from the fantastic teachers at Crestwood have helped me get to where I am today. The education I received extended far beyond the classroom, and many of the relationships I built at Crestwood are still strong today (many of my closest friends are those I made at Crestwood!)

School Highlights

News from around CPC

Experiencing Crestwood outside the walls of the school is an integral part of developing the whole student. Have a look at some of the adventures CPC students took in 2014-2015.

Nicaragua, March 2015

Fifteen Crestwood students and three teachers had the incredible experience of going to Nicaragua with Me to We. During this trip students helped to build a local school in Managua called EL Trapiche. They helped build a sidewalk, paint a gate and latrines for a playground. It was an eye opening experience, and a life changing adventure for everyone who participated.

Nashville, April 2015

The Crestwood Senior Wind Ensemble participated in a music festival and competition hosted by Festivals of Music on April 15th to 19th, 2015 in Nashville, Tennessee. Amid stiff competition from participating high schools from both the USA and Canada, they distinguished themselves by winning a Bronze trophy.

New Brunswick, April 2015

In the name of science, 29 biology students and 3 teachers made the long 17 hour bus ride to St. Andrews, New Brunswick to study the effect of tides on living things in the Bay of Fundy. Students had to fight the elements (cold, wind, rain) and fatigue in order to conduct real scientific investigations!

School Highlights

Drama Production, May 2015

The drama department has been busy the last couple of years, putting out two shows a year with our talented Crestwood actors. We have been representing our school proudly in the Sears Drama Festival, a country-wide celebration and competition of dramatic works, acted and directed by students. Last year we took on the East Coast play S.S. Effie, about a wreck off the coast of Newfoundland. Our Alumnist Sam Downey took home an Award of Merit for his acting in that performance. This year we will be performing a student written piece, touching on the dangers of alcohol and its connection to depression. Our school wide productions have been growing and conquering new challenges every year, including the addition of live music and increasing use of technology. Last year we journeyed to Agrabah and followed Aladdin on his adventures with Genie and Apu. Highlights include singing and dancing to Mr. Fong's Cave of Wonders Band, dazzling costumes and a green screen magic carpet ride into "A Whole New World". This year we are taking on the world of speakeasies and jazz in Bugsy Malone, a 1920's gangster comedy musical. Two rival crime bosses fight to control 1920's New York amidst the excitement and music of the Jazz . The show opens Monday May 2 at 7pm at Crestwood Preparatory College.

Human Rights Symposium, November 2014

Crestwood Preparatory College hosted its 2nd Human Rights and Tolerance Symposium. This day-long event brought together students interested in social justice in the world around them with dynamic, thought-provoking speakers and presenters. Students were inspired and engaged by a combination of keynote addresses, small-group seminars, and facilitated action workshops. As November 25th was the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women, the focus of this symposium was on recognizing, addressing, and stopping the oppression of women around the world. Guests included: Rosemary McCarney, Marina Nemat, Shaun Boothe, and groups of speakers from the Azrieli Foundation, Passages Canada and Children's Peace Theatre.

Dear Crestwood Community,

Over the past three years we have held "Swing Into Summer", a golf tournament and silent auction event. The event was a great success and rose over $75,000 for the Crestwood Preparatory College Bursary & Scholarship Foundation. The event brought together current students, parents, friends, alumni and supporters of Crestwood in a day of fun. Last year's Newsletter can be found in the upcoming Weekly Newsletters.

Based on feedback from the community we wanted to offer an event that may bring even more of the community together and we are proud to announce that we are organizing "Roll into Summer", a charity casino event. This year's event will be held on Thursday, June 16th, 2016, at 7:00 p.m. at Montecassino Hotel & Events Centre. Once again the event will provide a great opportunity for all members of the Crestwood Community to socialize, enjoy some great food, a silent and live auction and support the Foundation and the Crestwood community.

We are hoping that everyone will be able to either join us at the event or assist us in a donation or sponsorship. Details regarding these possibilities are enclosed.

For more information about Roll Into Summer you can contact Dave Hecock, Lisa Newton, Phil Santomero or Peter Tanev by email at roll@crestwood.on.ca
